SAM5041 - Religion, Education and Development

Person responsible for the course: Merethe Skårås (Merethe.Skaras@mf.no)
Credit point (ECTS): 10
Start of studies: Spring (irregular)
Study programme: Master's degree (2 years) - Master in Religion in Contemporary Society
Department: Department of Education, Religion and Society

General information
This course will introduce the students to development theories and on-going debates regarding the multiple relationships between education, religion and development. Often religion plays a key role in development on different levels. On a macro level, the course gives an introduction to central theories within the field of development studies. Added to these general theoretical frameworks the course introduces some central global dynamics of education. On a meso- and micro level, the course looks at religion in education giving examples from both national policies and local contexts where religion plays a central part in development. Some of the central theories presented in the course will be examined in-depth in selected empirical case studies. Perspectives will be drawn from religious studies, development studies, comparative and international education, international relations and the study of civil society and faith-based organizations. Both the role of religion in development and religion at different levels of educational policies and practices will be addressed.

Overlapping courses
SAM5041 Religion, Education and Development overlaps partly with SAM5146 Religion and Development. Students who have already completed SAM5146, will receive 5 credit points (ECTS) for SAM5041 on their transcript of records or diploma.

Course requirements
In order to receive a final assessment, the student must:
- present one article from the literature list to be shared with fellow students in your course. The presentation should be in an electronic format (for instance a podcast or video) and demonstrate oral communication and presentation skills and your ability to critically analyze an academic text. Please see detailed descriptions on the Canvas course page.
- attend at least 75% of lectures and seminars
- participate in the electronic evaluation of the course if such evaluation is stipulated in the relevant term

When course requirements are not fulfilled, this will count as one examination attempt, unless the student withdraws within the set deadline (1 May/ 1 November).

Final assessment
In order to pass SAM5041 the student must fulfil all the study requirements and write an essay (4000-4500 words) on a topic given by the professor. The essay is assessed with grades (A-F).
